Introduction

You are expected to arrive (no longer than) half an hour before the start, through the entrance at Oudezijds Voorburgwal 229-231. There is a dressing room available for you and your attendants, where one can potentially change and (mentally) prepare. Family and audience can enter the Agnietenkapel at the main entrance (Oudezijds Voorburgwal 229-231) as well.

At this location, there is a laptop and screen present, which runs on Windows and has a VGA/HDMI connection. The usable aspect ratios for PowerPoint presentations are 4:3 and 16:9. If you want to use a presentation during the layman talk, the technician can install it on the laptop. You can also use your own laptop, a MacBook for example, but please bring an adapter. You are kindly requested to send your presentation (.ppt/.pdf or likewise) one day in advance at the latest to av-aula@uva.nl, so the technician can set up the presentation beforehand.

There is no strict dress code but if you want to dress according to customary ritual, this is (including for the attendants): the tails with a white vest and white bow tie. The unwritten rule is: festive, though not too informal. Please remember that you will be standing for a while (approximately an hour and a half during the ceremony) and take this into consideration when choosing your shoes. Or bring an extra pair, just in case.

There will be a livestream throughout the ceremony. This will start at five minutes to the hour. You will receive the link to the livestream per email by webcolleges@uva.nl and this will be placed on the defence ceremony calendar on the website, unless you explicitly do not give permission for this. This video will stay online so you can watch it back. If you want to download the recording, you can send an email to the web lecture service.

The role of the attendants has changed through the years. Nowadays, it is firstly a courteous gesture to close colleagues or family to ask for mental support for the candidate. They usually also take the role as master of ceremonies for the entire day. The attendants are expected to provide the members of the committee with a copy of the thesis, if necessary. Make sure you have brought some copies.

The defence ceremony

Defence ceremonies start at the hour. Two minutes before, it is advisory that one of your attendants steps behind the microphone and announces the start. Hereby, the audience has the opportunity to sit down and the attendant can announce general notices such as turning off cell phones, no applause during the ceremony and that everybody has to remain seated during the committee deliberation, possible saying something about how the ceremony will proceed. After this, you have about ten minutes to present your work (this is not mandatory). The audience will likely appreciate you explaining your thesis in everyday terms. Make sure you have a watch or clock which you can keep an eye on so that the layman talk does not run late. Note: you and your attendants will start this part of the ceremony without any notice or signal from the beadle.

During the layman talk, the attendants are in the audience. After eleven minutes, the technician will enter the room and you will know to complete your talk. There will be several minutes left for the technician to clear the screen and laptop before the committee enters. Please take this into consideration. You are expected to be ready and standing at the side of the room with your attendants. In case you have committee members participating online, the technician will place a laptop on the lectern.

At a quarter past, your defence ceremony will officially begin. Your attendants will sit down on the chairs on the sides of the lectern. The chair starts the ceremony, welcomes the attendees and requests the candidate to read the first part of the formal text out loud. The printed formula is on the lectern and will include the title of the thesis it concerns. There will be a glass of water ready. Make sure you have pen and paper ready to make notes.

Thereafter, the chair introduces the opponents one by one, starting with the external or foreign members of the committee. The question and answer, including a short discussion, usually do not last longer than seven minutes, depending on the number of committee members. It can occur that a second round will happen when the committee is small.

The candidate begins their answer with the formal title and it is customary, but not mandatory, that you thank the opponent for their comments and their question, before you start the actual reply.

The formal titles are:

Highly esteemed opponent when it concerns a professor

Esteemed opponent when it concerns a doctor

For example: “(Highly) esteemed opponent, thank you for your comments and your questions.”

After 45 minutes, the beadle walks in and says HORA EST, on the hour.

You can briefly answer the last question or finish your answer. The chair will then ask you to announce the second part of the formal text, after which the committee will retreat shortly for deliberation. They leave, led by the beadle, and return after approximately five to fifteen minutes with the verdict and the diploma.

In the meantime, you can talk to your attendants. However, do not leave the room. Make sure that when the committee returns with the diploma, you stand in front of the lectern when the beadle signals this, with your attendants by your sides, looking into the direction of the chair and supervisor.

The chair announces that the committee has decided to grant you the doctorate, the supervisor pronounces the official text and you will be handed the diploma (do not forget to let this moment be captured on camera). You will be standing when they hand over the diploma and there will be no shaking of hands. Then the supervisor announces, according to the text on the form, that he will be the first one to congratulate the candidate. The laudation (praise) follows, this is the personal word of the supervisor. He potentially gives the floor to the co-supervisor. You are not expected to respond.

After the congratulating, the chair closes the ceremony. If there are committee members participating online, they will get the opportunity to congratulate you. Applause is now allowed. If there are committee members participating online, they will get the opportunity to congratulate you. The beadle invites you to follow them in leaving the room to go to the reception area, accompanied by your family (loved ones), committee and finally the audience.

When you do not have a reception at the Agnietenkapel, the audience stays in room; only the committee and family of the candidate follow to congratulate. In this case, the audience is notified during the deliberation by the attendants where the festivities will occur following the ceremony. They will also request the audience to leave through the front door. It is advised that one of the attendants joins the audience to the other venue, while the other attendant helps organizing leaving (making sure all things are packed, etc.).

The reception lasts about an hour, after which there is approximately half an hour to gather your things, possibly change and pay the guarded wardrobe and reception, by card. To arrange catering at your reception, please contact uva249.nl@cirfood.com.

A few tips:

- Always take pen and paper, to make notes. Some question may consist of different parts or refer to various chapters.
- We advise you to not bring any children under the age of six. You are the one that will be most bothered by this and the committee will most likely not appreciate it. For children, the ceremony is generally too boring.
- Photography and video-recording is allowed but the photographers are not allowed to stand on the podium or in between the candidate and the committee. Tripods are not allowed to be placed in the aisle. During the official ceremony no or little photographing is allowed and absolutely no flash and camera sounds..
- Disabled visitors can use the elevator. A hearing loop is present for those who are hard of hearing.
- Parking in the area is tricky. The nearest parking garages are: Stopera, Nieuwzijds Kolk and the Bijenkorf. Public transport is by far the better choice.
